Esmeralda's Missing Scarf

What a topsy-turvy day it was! The Festival of Fools had started, and Esmeralda was rushing to get dressed. She quickly flipped through her trunk, tossing costumes here and there.

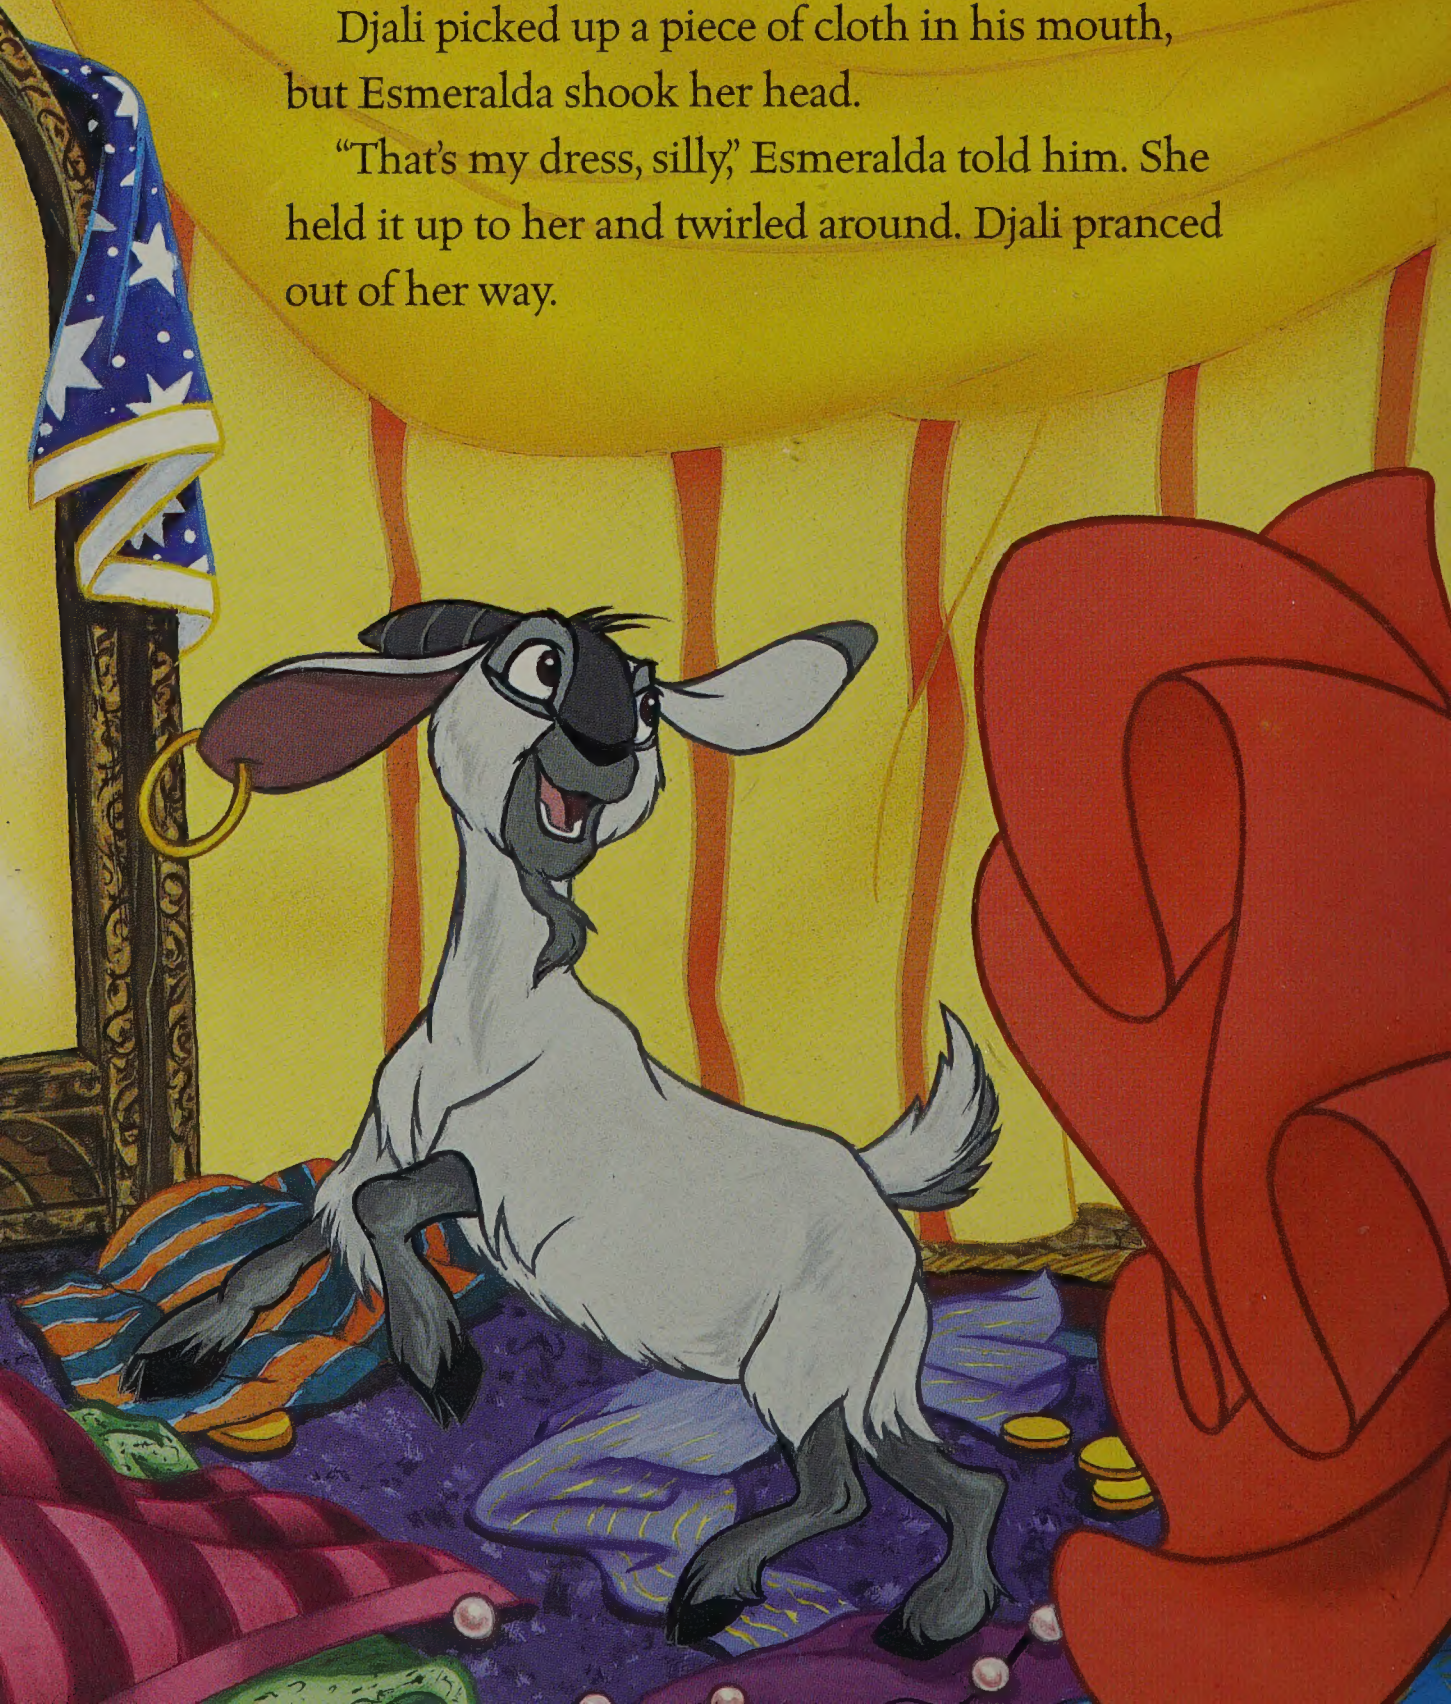

“Have you seen my special dancing scarf?” she asked her goat Djali.

Djali picked up a piece of cloth in his mouth,
but Esmeralda shook her head.

“That’s my dress, silly,” Esmeralda told him. She held it up to her and twirled around. Djali pranced out of her way.

Esmeralda got down on the floor to look behind the mirror. There was no scarf—but she did find Djali's secret hiding place for apples!

"Oh, where could my scarf be?" she said impatiently as she munched one of the apples.

Esmeralda rushed to a basket on the floor. Jeweled trinkets shone as she turned the basket upside-down, hoping to find her scarf.

“Maybe I dropped it outside!” she exclaimed. She slipped into her dress and ran outside.

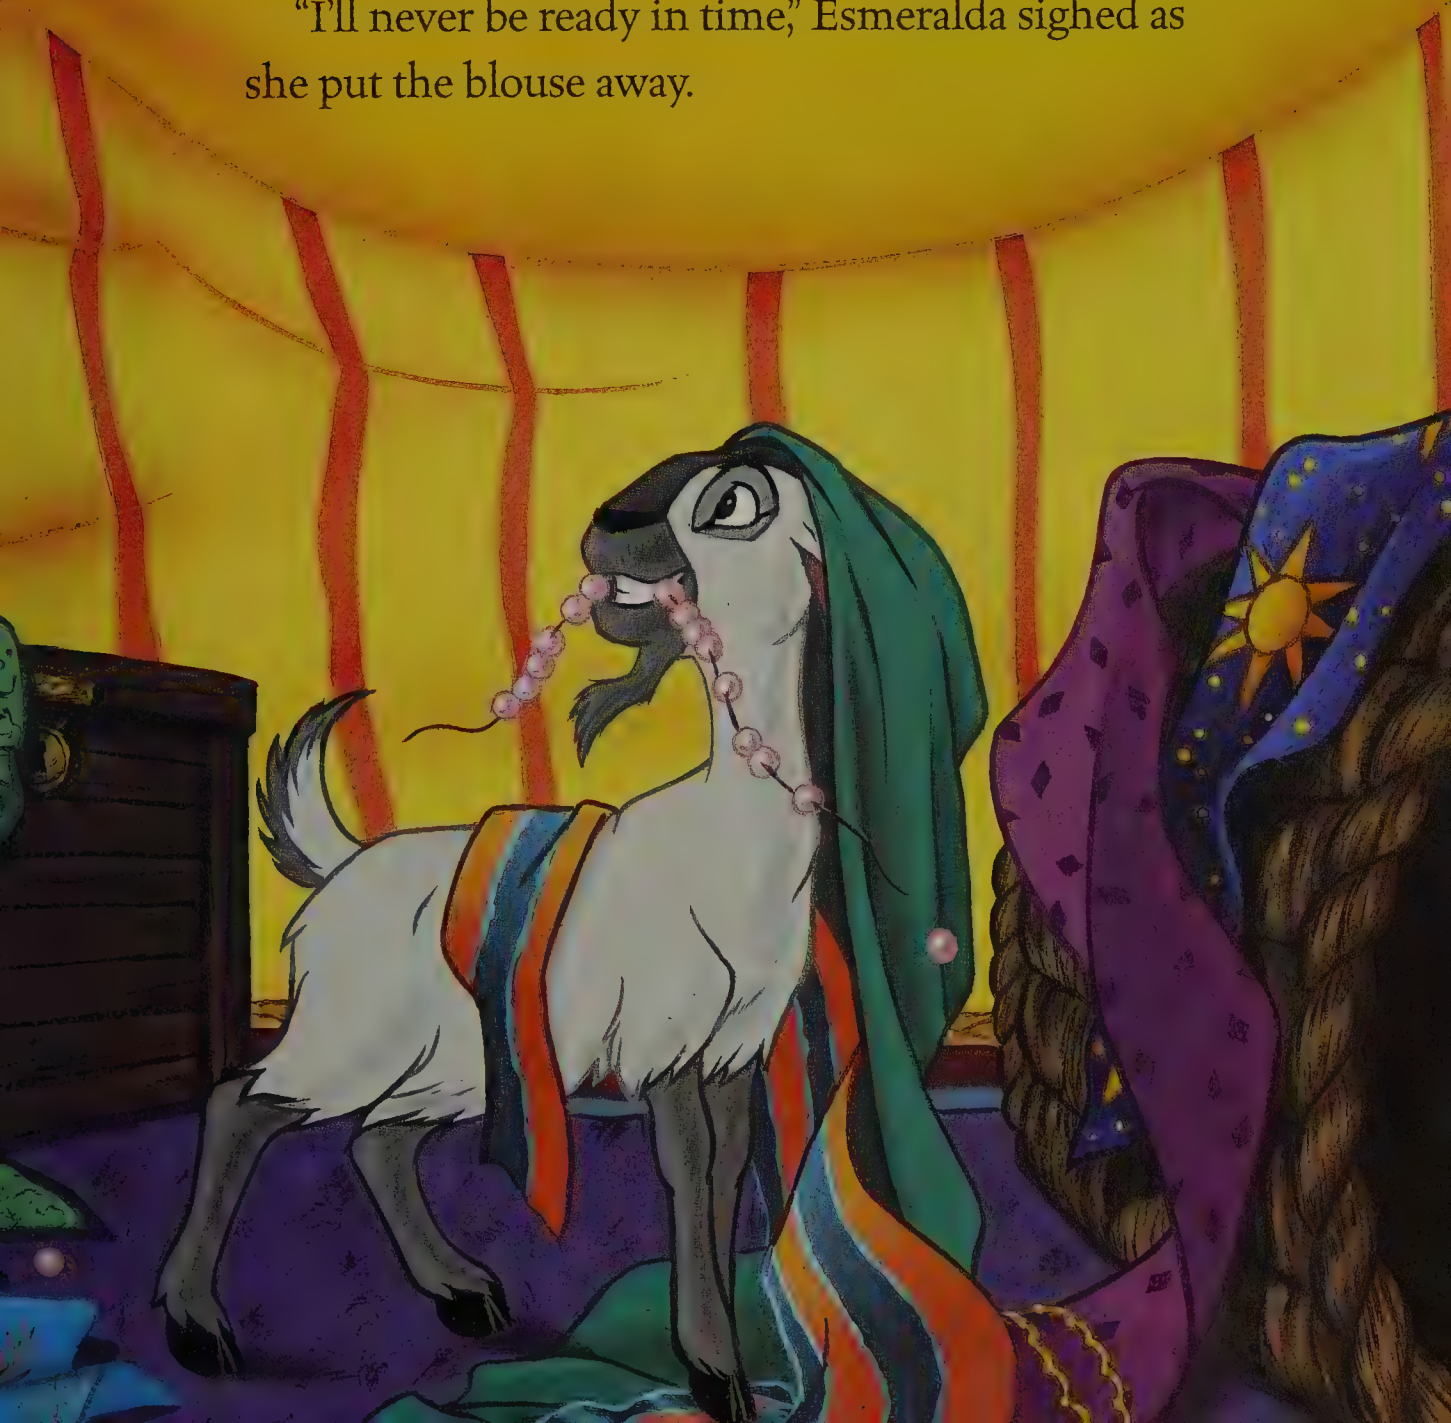

As she came back into her tent, a bright flash of purple in a corner caught Esmeralda's eye. "My scarf!" she cried happily.

But it was only a blouse, rolled up in a ball.

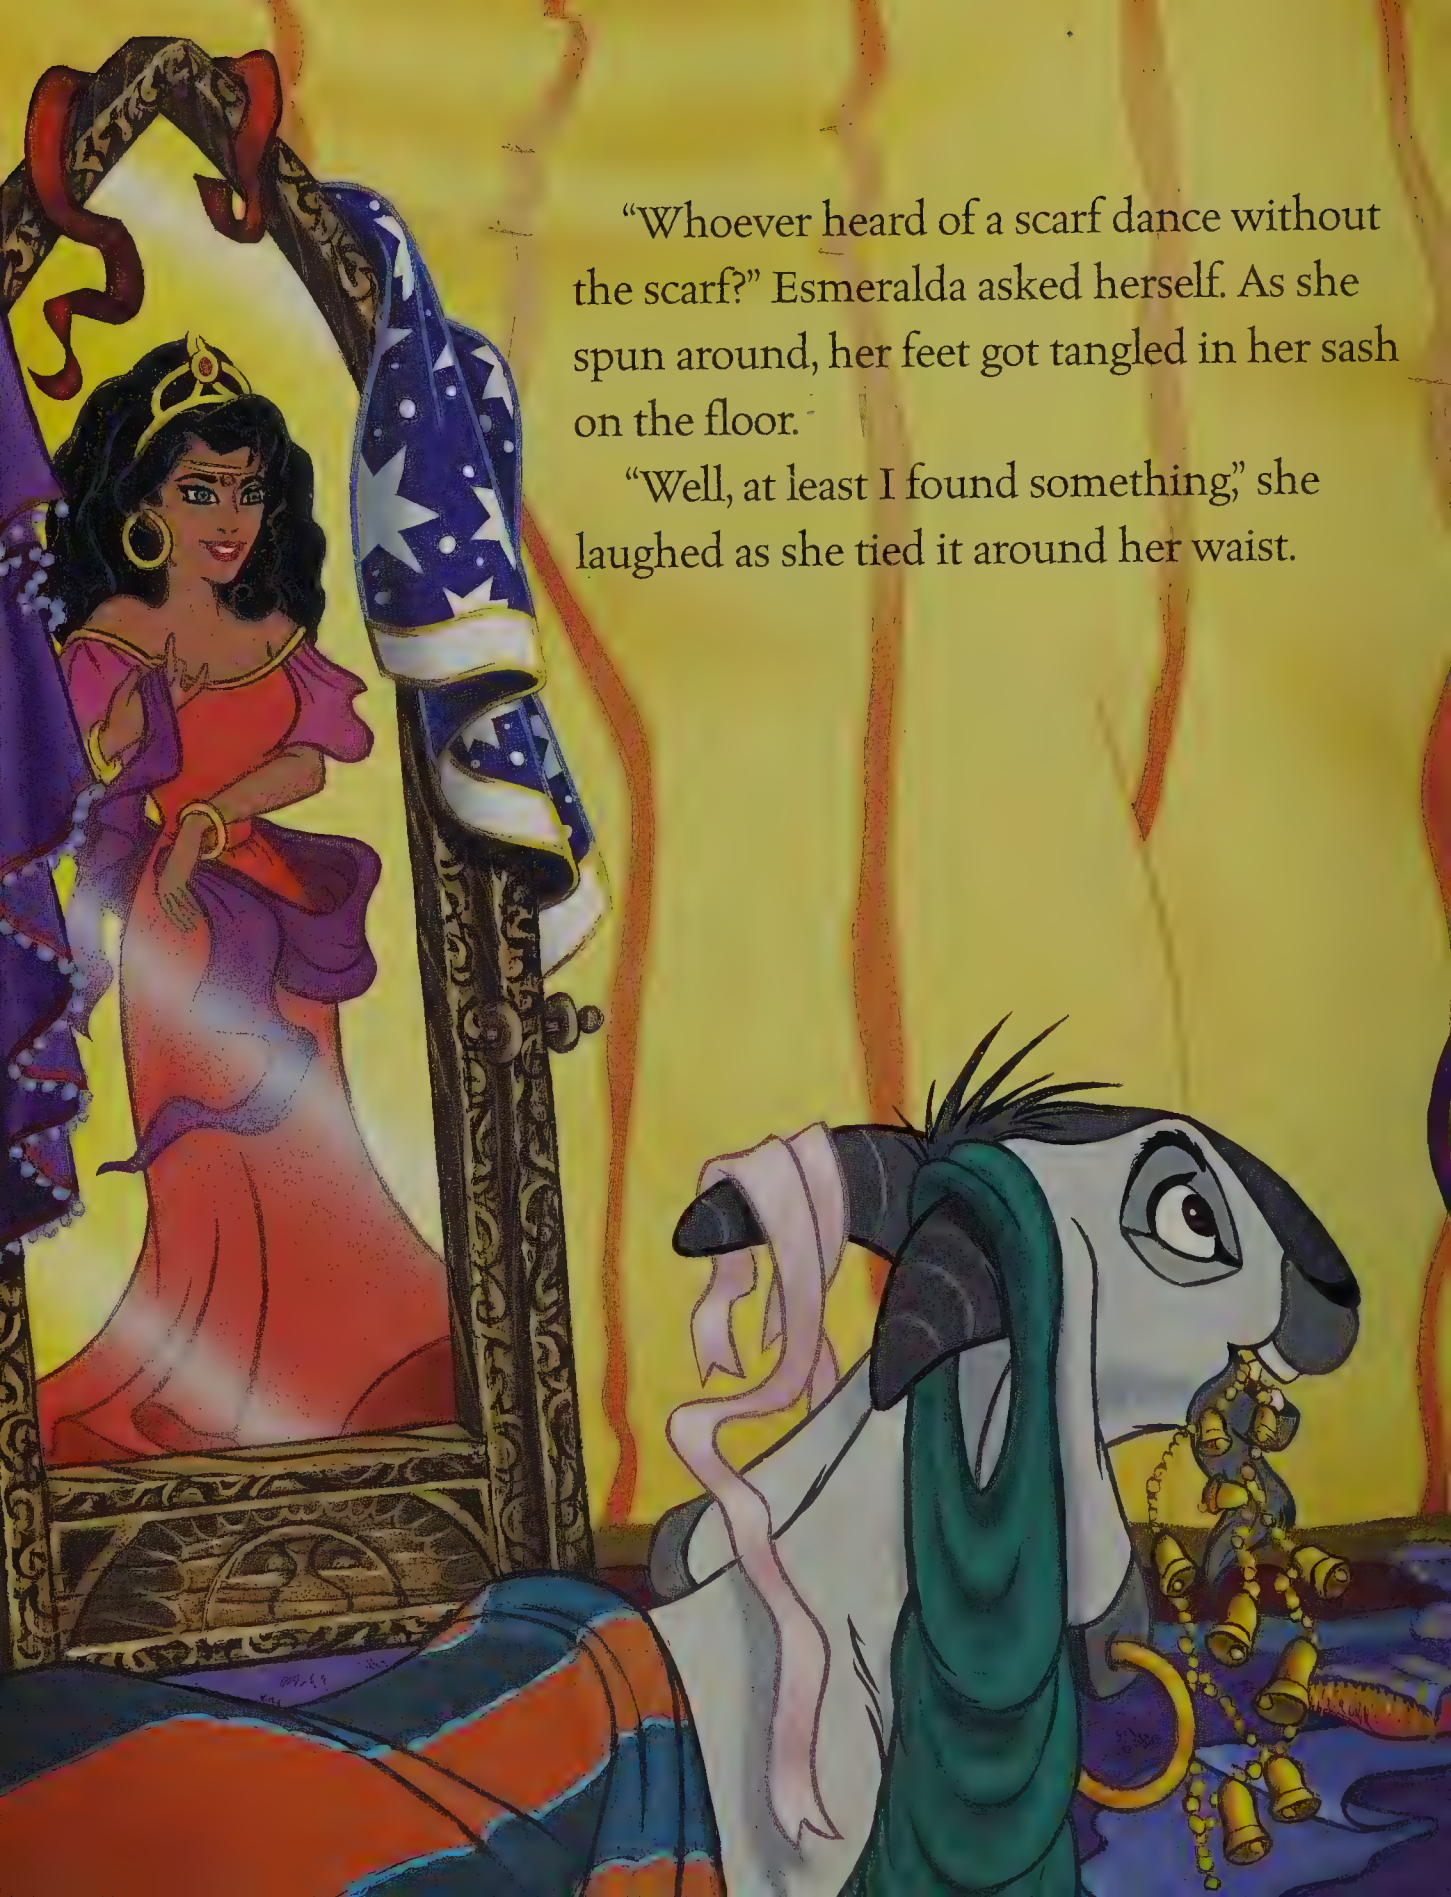

"I'll never be ready in time," Esmeralda sighed as she put the blouse away.

"Whoever heard of a scarf dance without the scarf?" Esmeralda asked herself. As she spun around, her feet got tangled in her sash on the floor.

"Well, at least I found something," she laughed as she tied it around her waist.

A loud trumpet sounded outside. It was almost time for Esmeralda to dance! Esmeralda had just enough time to watch the parade of fools go by.

CRASH!

A young man who looked as if he was wearing a very unusual mask fell into Esmeralda's tent.

"Are you all right?" Esmeralda asked, helping him up.

The young man was very embarrassed. "I'm sorry," he said slipping on the clothes that were everywhere. As he stumbled toward the door, a familiar bit of cloth slid out from under his feet.

Esmeralda smiled. "You've done me a favor," she said happily as she picked up her scarf. "And by the way, great mask!"

And as the confused young man hurried out of the tent, Esmeralda gracefully swirled the cloth over her head.

“At last! My special scarf!” She laughed as she danced out to join the festivities.
